WINES AND LIQUORS.

AT THE ACADEMY.

The usual audience witnessed the usual "Faust" at the Academy last night—same old story, nothing new. There are two plays annually presented in Richmond, which bring to the Academy people who seldom are seen within its walls. The plays in question are "The Old Homestead" and "Faust." The people who never miss these dramas are those who have not very broad-minded in their views regarding the theatre, but they look upon each of these plays in the light that they are "as good as a sermon."

A more frequent attendance upon the playhouse will convince them that the stage is not altogether bau by any means, and that there are many plays the moral influence of which is just as wholesome as that of the two with which they are so well acquainted.

Little need be said of Lewis Morrison's production of "Faust"; indeed, nothing new could be said of it. It has been announced that Mr. Morrison is visiting Richmond for the last time as Mephisto, but there are those who believe they have not seen the last of him as the devil. We have had his Satanic Madesty so long now, that we would miss his annual visit. It is said that the effect of the play upon the colored brethren in the gallery, is as good as a revival, and that there are some very good negroes in Jackson Ward for weeks after Lewis Morrison has gone on his way.

"The Christian" To-night.

"The Christian" To-night.

The Christian" To-night.

The Academy will have for its attraction to-night Hall Caine's dramatization of his novel, "The Christian." The play is one of the few that has met with remarkable and prolonged success. It is a romance of the church, without sectarianism; a lesson of the power of religion, antagonizing no creed, containing characters drawn from real life, full of intensity and meaning, and with situations as dramatic as any melodrama ever written.

Miss Allen as Viola of "Twelfth Night."

Night."

Miss Viola Allen's appearance here tomorrow afternoon and night at the Acadmy as the lovely Viola of Shakespeare's seightful comedy, "Twelfth Night," should prove the most important theatrical event
by the season.

This will be the fourth play in which Miss Allen has appeared since becoming a star, and her success has been unprepedented in theatrical annals.

Her first play was Hall Caine's "Christian," the great dramatic sensation of rerent years; then followed Miss Allen's appearance in F. Marion Crawford's "In the Palace of the King," another big hit;
last season she produced Hall Caines'
"The Ebernal City"—three big successes in a yow, and something heretofore unheard of during modern times.

Miss Allen's success as Viola in "Twelfth Night" is a foregone conclusion.
It is a role finally suited to her personal nharms, and when surrounded by so splendid a company a fine performance is asgured.

The production, too, is described as be-pured.

The production, too, is described as befing very magnificent, the Olivia's Garden being one of the most pretentious scenes produced in recent times. The play was staged by F. Percival Stevens, of Beerbohm Tree's, His Majesty's Theatre, London. Mr. Stevens staged Mr. Tree's famous "Twelfth Night" production three years ato.

Seats are being rapidly sold, and it may be best to secure to-day chairs for to-

The Mocking Bird.

Bright; witty, tuneful and charmingly original—these are the epithets that best describe "The Mocking Bird," in which Madeline Bessley will appear at the Academy Monday night.

Christmas Eve.

Christmas Eve.

People who really enjoy an old-time drama, in which childhood days are recalled, full of love of home and mother, with enough quaint humor to give a reliable to the theme of the play, should see "The Night Before Christmas," now running at the Bijou, the last performances of which are announced. The plees calls for no real emotional work—that is, of the character which one has to pay three to five prices to see, and then take the manager's name for the production being high class—but for life-like characters, with plain every-day people on the stage, "natural as life," the "Night Before Christmas" is all right and fills the bill in every way.

There are three performances—to-night, Saturday matinee and Saturday night.

Stage Realism.

Two practical trains of cars, each 200 feet long, running in opposite directions at full speed, in plain view of the audience, is one of the spectacular scenes in 'Her Marriage Vow,' which will be seen at the Bijou Theatre next week.

Revival Services. Br. Weston Bruner, pastor of Calvary
